CLOCKTOWER CHRONICLE STAFF hose looking for quality child care need look no further than the Rend Lake College Foundation Children's Center. The RLCFCC was recently reaccredited by the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC) the designation is THE mark of quality in early childhood education.

NAEYC accredited programs must meet 10 standards. They must promote positive relationships for all children and adults, implement curriculum for all areas of child development and have a qualified staff - just to name a few.

Brooke Pulke, director at the RLCFCC, said, "The center was up for reaccreditation in July of 2012. The staff worked tirelessly to prepare and, after an assessment visit from a NAEYC representative, the RLCFCC was awarded reaccreditation for five additional years."

Criminal Justice program's first 'Round Up for Scholarships' a big success

BY STACI JOHNSON

clockTower CHRONICLE STAFF he Criminal Justice first annual Round Up for Scholarships was held on Oct. 29 and raised nearly $3,000. All proceeds will go to the new scholarships designed for criminal justice students.

RLC Criminal Justice Instructor Ron Meek said the scholarships could go to help students with tuition, book fees, and possibly help with times of hardship, such as with gas funds, or some car repairs.

"Sometimes, it's the little things that could mean the difference between graduation or not, such as when a student has a flat tire or no gas to get to class," said Meek. Meek spearheaded the task of designing, building, and setting up the scholarship fund.

"There is definitely a need for the scholarships in this area," said Patrice LeNard. The 23year-old Mount Vernon resident is currently a student in the program and serves in the Army National Guard. She was one of a handful of guest speakers at the scholarship event.

"I think that the event turned out great and I was extremely impressed with everyone that took time out of their day to come out and support the criminal justice program," she said.

Those in attendance included several leaders in the local criminal justice field.

Illinois 2nd Judicial Circuit Court Judge Nicole Villani and Jefferson County State's Attorney Douglas Hoffman made an appearance. They presented the program a check in the amount of $1,000. The funds for this donation are from the State's Attorney Drug Forfeiture Fund.

"We had a great turnout. I set my goal at 50 people and there were approximately 60 that turned out for the event," said Meek.

In addition to Judge Villani and State's Attorney Hoffmann, Judge Michael McHaney, RLC President Terry Wilkerson, and Shawna Hall, CEO of the Rend Lake College Foundation, were present. There were several teachers and staff also in attendance.

"We had several students speak throughout the evening, and they all did really great", said Meek.

The list of speakers, made up of current students and graduates from Rend Lake, included Sam Buffington, LeNard, Hesten Mays, and Sara Palmer.

Rend Lake College's Applied Science and Advanced Technology Division Chair Chris Nielsen shows off the renovated machine shop in the Advanced Technology Center on campus. A contact in Chicago provided new machines for the program at RLC, just for the price of shipping.

Machine Shop at RLC gets an overhaul

BY FERNANDO JACINTO

clockTOWER CHRONICLE STAFF end Lake College is advancing every day in education and leadership. Lately, this progress is illustrated by the renovated machine shop in the Applied Science and Advanced Technology Division.

The machine shop recently acquired new machines for students to use in training. According to Applied Science and Advanced Technology Division Chair Chris Nielsen, machines were donated from Chicago public schools and Ohio.

Nielsen explained how the machine shop at Rend Lake became a sort of storage area over the past several years.

"We were looking for a place to put our machine shop," he said. "It became apparent that we needed a good-sized space."

They painted the area, washed the windows and ended up using the storage area as the new machine shop. According to Nielsen, there are nine lays, five mills and other various types of machining equipment to support the classes employees for their businesses.

"Not only do they need them for machining, they need them for welding and all the hand trades," he said. "So it is a response to demand here in the college district."

Nielsen said students benefit from this program because they gain technical skills that allow them to market themselves not only here in the district, but also in other places, for higherpaying positions.

"Usually, pay starts out at $20 an hour," he said. "One of our students ended up working in St. Louis and is now paid $45 an hour."

Nielsen added that the businesses here in the district also benefit because they have a much more qualified pool of workers to choose from.

"We've got a whole different composite of different kinds of lays," Nielsen said. "What we did was we went out and basically shopped for used equipment, which is the same as if you were shopping for a used car." He said the college bought equipment from other schools and small businesses that were using them or were not using them anymore. "Some are second-hand manual equipment," he said. "Probably the best part about it is the collaboration with the Chicago public schools. Through a contact up there, they actually donated two nearly new lays and two nearly new mills that, if we would have gone out and bought them, we probably would have spent $40,000. They just basically donated them to Rend Lake College for the cost to have them shipped down here."

According to Nielsen, the machine program was once offered at Mt. Vernon Township High School, but was limited to night classes there.

"This [renovation] gives us the flexibility to have day classes — classes during the morning and evening," he said.

All of the updated equipment is in good working condition, maximizing the training program, according to Nielsen.

"If you're going to be a machinist, you've got to learn some basics about speeds and feeds and how to turn steel," he said. "You must learn what you can do when you can cut steel. And it basically prepares students to go on to a more advanced type of machining where they use an automated process called CNC machines."

Nielsen said the department's ultimate goal is to advance students to the more programmable CNC machines, once they have learned how to operate the

The reason why Nielsen and the department decided to renovate was because of demands from the local industry — namely Magnum Steel Works and Lay's Manufacturing in Mt. Vernon. Nielsen said businesses in both Jefferson and Franklin counties need skilled, metal-working

Apply early for internships

Internships in field of study may help students and recent graduates find a job

METRO CREATIVE CONNECTION ecent college grads have found the job market to be somewhat underwhelming. Gaining the attention of a prospective employer is never easy, and it's even less so when the economy is struggling.

One of the ways current students or even recent graduates can make themselves more attractive to prospective employers is to find the right internship. Internships are not always easy to get, and many of them don't pay. But students who find the right internship often look back and recognize that their internship was their first step toward a rewarding career, and a step that provided valuable insight into their chosen field. To find the right internship, consider the following tips:

• Work with your school. Whether you're in college or you're that rare high schooler looking for an internship, lean on your school for direction and advice. Colleges and universities have career centers that can help you gain an internship. They can assist you through access to job listings and by providing advice on crafting resumes and cover letters or tips on how to interview. In addition to your school's career center, speak to professors in your advice on what prospective employers are looking for from an intern.

• Start early. It's never too early to start looking for an internship. In fact, many companies hope to have their internship positions filled well in advance. For example, if you're looking for a summer internship, begin your search no later than January and continue that search throughout the semester.

In addition to starting early, don't just seek summer internships. Some companies make internship opportunities available year-round, so you might be able to get one that coincides with the school year, even if internship opportunities on the large job listing websites.

• Do some networking. You might not have an expansive network of associates to tap into, but that does not mean you should go it alone. Talk to your parents to see if they or someone they know has heard about any internship opportunities in your chosen field. You might also be able to network via your school's career center, which likely has an alumni-networking service that enables you to contact past graduates currently working in your chosen field. In some instances, these alumni-networking services can be an internship gold mine, as past graduates might prefer to hire current students from their alma mater as opposed to applicants from other schools. Competition > for internships is often steep, and that's especially so when the economy is struggling and even recent graduates are hoping to land internships. But students can employ several strategies to find the right internships and take their first steps toward rewarding careers.

CLOCKTOWER CHRONICLE STAFF een refilling the water bottle at the station in the academic building? Or throwing away trash in one of the several green bins on campus?

Both of these green items have been placed throughout Rend Lake College's campus by an Illinois Green Economy Network grant. The effects of this grant can not only be seen by the purchase of these beneficial items, but by a "Greening Your Curriculum" class now being offered to faculty by Associate Professor Greg Hollman.

"Greening Your Curriculum," found in the RLC's course catalog as GYC 1601, was approved last April by both the Illinois Community College Board and the curriculum committee. It is a two-credit-hour course in which the RLC professors enrolled will be expected to learn what sustainability means, identify opportunities for new behaviors that reduce the negative impact of the environment, and prepare to articulate the information to students.

RLC faculty Rob Little and Nathan Brower are two of 10 teachers who enrolled in the GYC course this semester.

"I found the course to be very rewarding," said Little. "For the final class project, I'm creating a Special Topics English course that uses environmental disaster fictions — novels like The Grapes of Wrath, films like Godzilla and video games like Fallout 3 — to teach sustainability and greening concepts."

"The term sustainability is thrown around a lot these days, but I do not think everyone understands what all it encompasses," Hollmann explained. "If we expect our students to embrace sustainable practices they must first define what it means and why it is important in their lives. Instructors at RLC are in the perfect position to aid in this process. By greening their own curriculum, they better understand sustainability and the way in which it relates to their field of study."

Warriors start season with high-scoring wins in Carterville

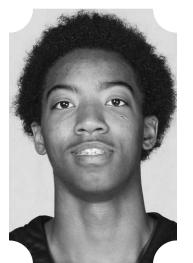

CLOCKTOWER CHRONICLE STAFF The Rend Lake College Warriors started the basketball season 2-0 after a high-scoring opening weekend at John A. Logan College. RLC will play its home opener at 3 p.m. Saturday, against South Suburban College - the team that beat Rend Lake in the opening round of the national championship tournament last season.

The Warriors handled the Memphis-based prep program, Southern Sports Institute, 102-87 on Friday before downing Ivy Tech Community College, 100-86, Saturday afternoon.

Rend Lake led SSI 51-47 at the half. RLC's 6-3 freshman guard Cortez Macklin of Louisville led the Warriors with 28 against SSI. Macklin hit 10 of 16 from the field three from long range and went a coach's dream, 11 of 12, from the free-throw line. The Warriors had four more score in double digits. Trice Whaley of Jeffersonville, Ind. had 10, Corey Ayala of Metropolis had 15, Noel Allen of Guttenburg, N.J. had 14 and Bronson Verhines of Woodlawn had 13. RLC, as a team, finished 39-44 from the charity stripe and pulled down 33 rebounds - seven offensively and 26 on defense. Verhines led the team with seven boards.

College and Southwestern Illinois College. RLC lost to City College of Chicago — Kennedy King at the KC Jamboree and fell by six to SWIC in Belleville.

"After watching them in Kankakee and Belleville, I think we have the basis for being a very competitive and very good team," Rend Lake Head Coach Randy House said. We have to buy into the team concept versus being a bunch of individuals in there playing.

While sophomores Allen and Verhines are automatic starters early, House said depth at every position will allow him to retrofit rosters that match his opponent this year.

"It's up to me to mix and match them, and put the best team on the floor. Let's just say there is a reason for optimism." House is in his third season at the helm of basketball at The Lake. The team is coming off of the college's best season in history with a trip to the NJCAA Championship Tournament. Dawson Verhines and Allen played a huge role in that success.

RLC competes in Cross Country Regional Championship

BY JOSH MYERS

CLOCKTOWER CHRONICLE STAFF end Lake College's cross country squads competed in the Region XXIV Championship Tournament, Oct. 26, at Rend Lake Golf Course in Whittington.

The men's team finished third overall behind Danville Area Community College and champion Lincoln College.

For RLC: Wesley Bradshaw (Walsh), Jon Hill (Sparta), Wade Reeves (Evansville), Shawn Burke (Matawan, N.J.), Tivosiel Rivera (Swedesboro, N.J.) and Maurice Sapp (Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.) combined for a total time of 2 hours, 22 minutes and 10 seconds.

Individually, Bradshaw finished the course in 27 minutes and 15 seconds to finish eighth overall. Hill finished ninth with a time of 27 minutes and 44 seconds. Reeves rounded off the top 10 with a time of 27:50. The men's champion was Albert Murrey (Durham, N.C.) of Lincoln College with a time of 26:59.

With two runners competing, the Lady Warriors did not produce a team result. Danville Area took first as a team, while runner-up went to Illinois Central College, Kaskaskia College took third and Lincoln came in fourth.

Individually, RLC's Kirsten Knapp (DuQuoin) finished 18th with a time of 23:28 and Kiera Deford (Pinckneyville) finished 24th with a time of 25 minutes.

James Wooldridge came on board as the program's head coach only a couple of weeks ago, following the resignation of Eric Alberter. Wooldridge now has regionals behind him and will play the role of host coach when hun-

"We've worked really hard," Wooldridge said. "Going into nationals, we'll have three strong weeks under our belt. I'm really looking forward to nationals."

CLOCKTOWER CHRONICLE EDITOR

end Lake College Athletics recently welcomed James Wooldridge as the new head coach of men's and women's cross country, following the resignation of three-year coach Eric Alberter.

Wooldridge, 49, of Herrin, took the job, knowing full and well what was coming up around the corner. Not only did he have only one race with the team before its regional, but Rend Lake will host the national championships, Nov. 10, at Rend Lake Golf Course – less than one month after Wooldridge came on board.

No problem. "It's a great experience," he said about preparing for nationals. "I'm excited about it. But, on the same point, I don't want to mess anything up! One really good thing is all the staff at the college who have been phenomenal in helping out. I think its under control. It's looking good. Fingers are crossed!"

He said he consulted in the coach from last year's host, New Mexico Junior College, to get some tips. He told Wooldridge that he can't possibly please everyone and to just do his best. That sounds a lot like Wooldridge's coaching style. He tells his runners at Rend Lake, "Do the best you can do at everything you are doing. School is important. You want to open as many doors as possible on your way to college. Kids today think everything comes in 30 seconds. They don't look at the long term and I try to preach that to them. They are going to miss so much if they don't do everything they can do while they are here."

The father of two teenage daughters, Kaci and Abby, Wooldridge coached in the past at high schools in southern Illinois and Colorado Springs. He also does some individualized training with local runners. He said coaching at the collegiate level was a goal of his and Rend Lake is the perfect fit.

"It's a dream situation for me. It's local. It's a smaller community, which I like. And the people behind it seem to back it 100 percent, which is great."

Wooldridge has a lot contribute to the young runners at RLC. He ran at Southeast Missouri State University and was a part of its cross country and track programs that each finished third in the nation. After college, Wooldridge continued to run competitively. This past summer, he was USA Track and Field Masters' National steeplechase champion. His goal is to beat the USATF Masters American steeplechase record of 10:10 – he needs to trim his time by about 20 to 30 seconds, he said. Not too shabby for a guy who will celebrate his 50th birthday next month. In early December, Wooldridge will enter the cross country nationals in Kentucky with the rest of his Tennessee-based teammates. He'd put his team in the top 10 going in, he said.

"There are things I wish I had done differently when I was a collegiate runner. I have that wisdom to give to these young guys here at Rend Lake College. That's why I am coaching. I want to see them run as well as they can. They have been working hard and I think we are going to see some good results at nationals."

Fantasy Football Tip for Week 10 -Week 10 is the week to start Raiders running back Darren McFadden. To this point in the season, McFadden is 19th in the league in rushing yards and is only averaging 3.3 yards per carry. This week he plays the Baltimore Ravens who are ranked 30th in league allowing 142.9 rushing yards per game. He has struggled thus far but should get it going this week. - Josh Myers This group of Rend Lake College student athletes and their coach, Jason Craig, RIGHT, in the PHOTO ABOVE, donated their time and talents on a recent Saturday afternoon to help out with the Great Pumpkin 5K in Mt.
